Growth from Apps & Entertainment

Mobile computing has changed the way consumers shop, socialize, play, and more. With thousands of mobile apps available for consumers to download, there really is almost an app for anything that consumers could desire. According to Statista, the number of users in the United States with a smartphone is expected to climb from 207.2 million people to 236.8 million people by 2019. This compares to only 62.6 million Americans that had a smartphone back in 2010.

The mobile revolution in the United States has seen substantial growth over the past many years. However, the latest trend in the mobile app universe is going back to the free app model with a focus on in-app purchases (“freemium” apps). Paid apps were once popular, but have lost their appeal with consumers in recent years. This has forced app developers to transform and convert their mobile applications from paid to free. One company that stands to benefit from the projected growth in mobile computing and “freemium” apps is Metatron Inc. (OTC Pink: MRNJ).
